GET AHEAD WITH A FRESH START

Strengthening corporate adaptability

Whether you serve twelve sales markets or run nine production sites, one objective matters most: leveraging not just size and strength, but the ability to reorient quickly as the decisive competitive advantage. After all, regardless of their individual starting points, more and more industrial companies are making their own adaptability a core competency.

This requires a willingness to rethink what has worked in the past and to make decisions quickly. That applies even when major course corrections are needed – for example, when entering new markets or working with new partners. The articles in this issue show how this is already being put into practice.

We wish you an informative and inspiring read.

Best regards
